

Studies & Hamburg Opera Years 1888-1916

Watch for surprises: the final scene from Salome; Mahler's Symphony No. 4, and Mahler songs with Bruno Walter at the piano; Mussorgsky's Songs and Dances of Death; and rarely heard operas such as Pfitzner's Palestrina, Bittner's Die Kuhlhaymerin, or Kienzl's Der Kuhreigen.

I have taken the path of least resistance when it comes to opera titles, using the English form of familiar operas such as Marriage of Figaro, Magic Flute, Tales of Hoffmann, Merry Wives of Windsor, etc. The opera names and Lied cycles should be italicized, but that hasn't been done in this Chronology. The Lied names should be within quotes, but again, that hasn't been done. Also, as a space-saving measure, when a Lied has been referred to, I have chosen to use an abbreviated version: "Willst du dein Liebsten sterben sehen" becomes "Willst du..."

It may appear to be a typo, but the Germans call Butterfly's Pinkerton, "Linkerton," and though Faust is called Margarethe in German speaking lands, I leave it as Faust in this chronology.

During the Hamburg Opera years there were performances in Altona which was then a suburb of Hamburg, and these are noted. The Metropolitan Opera, Vienna Opera, and Chicago Opera toured and the city of those performances is also provided.

The performers (singers and conductors) are listed with their given names the first times they appear. Opera composers' names are given the first time the opera is listed; the same applies to Lied composers. Lehmann's name is abbreviated LL; her regular pianists: Ernő Balogh: EB, Paul Ulanowsky: PU; Bruno Walter: BW; Gwendolyn Williams Koldofsky: GK.

The three digit numbers referencing a performance, recording, interview, etc., refer to the Discography found in Volume I of the iBook, or on the Lotte Lehmann League website: Documentation

When you read (!) or (sic) it means something incredible like multiple performances on one day.
